

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

UC-NRLF

$B 307 368

959 G8232
2

IRELAND : A SONG OF HOPE
AND OTHER POEMS

Books by Padric Gregory.

THE ULSTER FOLK (1912)

OLD WORLD BALLADS (1913)

MODERN ANGLO-IRISH VERSE (1914)

LOVE SONNETS (1914)

Alice Hull

Ireland : A Song of Hope

And other Poems

By

PADRIC GREGORY

DUBLIN

The Talbot Press, Ltd.
289 Talbot Street

LONDON

T. Fisher Unwin, Ltd.
1 Adelphi Terrace

1917

Printed by
THE TALBOT PRESS, LTD.
89 Talbot Street, Dublin

THE TALBOT PRESS

DEDICATION

TO

THE REV. GEORGE O'NEILL, S.J.

Professor of Philology and English Language at University College, Dublin

IN GRATEFUL ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF MY INDEBTEDNESS TO HIM FOR HELPFUL CRITICISM
I DEDICATE THESE VERSES

AUTHOR'S NOTE

A number of the poems here collected for the first time have already appeared in the following anthologies: The Treasury of Irish Prose and Verse (George Routledge & Son), edited by Mr. Guy W. Pertwee; The Book of Irish Poetry (The Talbot Press, Ltd., Dublin), edited by Mr. Alfred Perceval Graves; The Lullabies of Four Nations (The De La More Press), edited by Miss Adelaide G. A. Gosset; A Little Book of Irish Verse (Heath, Cranton, Ltd.), edited by Mr. Albert A. C. White; and one poem is reprinted from Modern Anglo-Irish Verse (David Nutt), edited by myself. Others in this volume originally appeared in Studies, New Ireland, The Irish Book Lover, Irish Opinion, The Clongowinian, The Irish Rosary, The Cross, &c., &c. To those to whom I am indebted for permission to reprint any of the verses in this book I desire to tender my sincere thanks.

PADRIC GREGORY.

CONTENTS

	Page
POEMS AND BALLADS RELATING TO IRELAND
✓ Ireland: A Song of Hope	... 1
✓ Ireland and World Freedom	... 8
The Capture of the Cannon (A.D. 1690)	... 12
The Bridge of Athlone (A.D. 1691)	... 17
✓ A Ballad of Heroes (A.D. 1798)	... 21
 CHRISTMAS CAROLS AND BALLADS
A Churl's Song of Christmas (A.D. 1300)	... 27
Hoc Die Dominus Noster Nascitur	... 31
Mary's Song to Jesus	... 33
A Ballad of Bethlehem	... 37
An Old English Yule Song	... 41
 OLD-WORLD BALLADS
The Mad Son (A.D. 1490)	... 47
The Ballad of Friar Mark	... 51
Sir John of the Fenwoods	... 53
The Sign of the Cross	... 57
 MEMORIAL VERSES
The Healer	... 61
The Comforter	... 63
 SACRED VERSES
To the Man-God	... 67
The Cry of the Penitent	... 68
The Birth of Day	... 69
A Song of Hope	... 70
The Cross	... 72

	Page
FREE TRANSLATIONS FROM THE IRISH
A Bard's Lament over his Children	... 77
The Lament of Credhe over Cael	... 80
LOVE SONGS
"There is a land where oleanders blow"	... 85
Chopin's 7th Prelude	... 87
A Border-Laird's Love Song	... 88
Ave et Salve	... 90
MISCELLANEOUS POEMS
The Sphinx	... 93
April	... 95
The Linnet's Song	... 96
Alia Tentanda Via Est	... 97
The Art of Austin Dobson	... 99
To Madeline	... 104
The Dream-Teller	... 106
An Ending	... 107
Mananan MacLir	... 108
A Prayer to God The Father for the World	... 110

POEMS AND BALLADS RELATING TO IRELAND

IRELAND: A SONG OF HOPE

IRELAND: A SONG OF HOPE

NOT in this day, O Ireland, shalt thou perish,
What though red ruin spates
all peoples down,
For thou still bringest forth strong sons who cherish
A fierce and sacred love for thy renown.

Heed not if even the angels gasp astounded,
If the blood-drunken earth, o'er-gorged of wars,
Crunches the clay-based thrones kings deemed rock-founded,
And vomits them unto the startled stars.

For not on rock or brass is thy throne builded,
 But on proud passionate hearts in every clime ;
And they will bear thee, who hath royally filled it, Till Judgement bugles blare the doom of Time.

Mother of warriors, heroes, saints, and sages !
 Thy day hath yet to dawn : thy martyrs' cries
God yet shall hear and grant thee, thro'
 the ages,
 The freedom thou hast craved for centuries.

For God wots well since thou became enslaved—
 What though thy cheeks are scarred with salten tears—
Thy faith in His White Word hath lived and bravéd
 The Oppressor's might for nigh a thousand years.

Thy sorrowed eyes have seen invading foemen—

Grim sons of grimmer sires King Dathy shamed—

Make of thy land a death-pen where their yeomen

Burned and pillaged, raped and racked, and maimed.

At their command thy homesteads have been shattered,

Thy best-born shipped across the seas
as slaves,

Or left to rot, with gaping eyes, bloodspattered,

Or heaped like vermin into unmarked graves.

And yet, O land beloved ! the years have found thee

Sole Sovereign still, in hearts of noble birth ;

Meetly, O land revered ! the years have crowned thee

A type eternal of true mother's worth.

For thee, men laboured in the sheltered haven,
 Laid the war-corach's keel, and manned its side,
And broke the standards of the Danish
 Raven,
 And drove their corpse-strewn ships back o'er the tide.

For thee, a thousand times, in 'venging rallies
 Thy lion-hearted met and fought and bled ;
A thousand times thy hills, and woods,
 and valleys,
 Have shown the stars their grasses splashed with red.

While warred thy sinewy brood for death or honour ;
 For ne'er to victor foe were known to kneel Niall, Brian, Malachy, O'Connor, O'Donnell, Art Macmurrough, or Shane O'Neill.

And age left age thy bitter wrong's sad story,

And hand to hand gave down the torch afame :

Thine O'Sullivan Beare's and Owen
Roe's glory ;

Red Hugh's and Sarsfield's, Tone's and Emmet's fame.

Theirs to unloose the welded chains thou worest—

The chains we yet shall rive and tear in twain ;

Theirs, theirs, to struggle when the strife was sorest,

And ours the fruit of all their searing pain.

And theirs the bitterness when Hate's dark surges

Gathered and broke o'er thee, adown
the years ;

Ours, ours the joy when thy sweet form emerges

From slavery's Pale, cleanséd in God's own tears.

In this our day thou shalt be freed, O Mother!

And leave thy sundered chains behind the bars ;

And we will rear thy throne o'er every other,

And aureole thy brows with gleaming
stars.

Thy golden womb shall still give forth new sages

To teach the peoples, listening in meek awe,

To love the rule of equal right, through ages,

To guard and keep that nobler, juster law.

And thou shalt win the whole world's adulation,

And when thy stainless standard is unfurled,

Thy new and eldern glory every nation

Will hymn in thunderous pæans round
the world.

And we, with those long exiled from their sireland,

Wherever they hold empery, shall not fail

With welkin-echoing cheers to bid thee, Ireland,

Mother of Mothers, Queen of Queens, all hail !

IRELAND AND WORLD FREEDOM.

IRELAND! this is my song of you—

This is the song I give your sons

*(Patriots all, and staunch and true),
To sing in despite of the brattling guns.*

The drums of doom, at Islam's gate,
Shall beat full soon, nor be denied !
The virgin torn, the gray-beard spate,
Whose ghosts to God for vengeance cried

Shall be avenged ; and spectral hosts
Of slain from Greece and Macedon,
From Crete to the Dalmatian coasts, Shall rise to see the vengeance done.

The worms shall glut and feast their fill
Upon the bones of throneless Czars,
The Muscov speak his sons his will.
About this age's freeing wars.

The Pole, the Maygar, held in thrall,
And all who knew the bondsman's shame
Shall crash aside the cup of gall And break the bonds that sear and maim.

The races tyranny long smote Shall beat their swords to ploughing-shares,
Armenian, Albanian, Croat, Shall hymn High-God in lauding prayers.

And as the peoples rose and broke
The power of eldern Ayran kings :
In distant Cathy burst the yoke,
Thro' Babylon's walls clove openings,

And left the Pantheon a place Where now but green-backed lizards bide,
Exterminated Phillip's race,
And crushed the haughty Burbons' pride,

So shall the peoples bring to dust
The Teuton's breed: his power shall wane,
And battle-fields shall gape and lust
For sacrificial blood in vain.

And men shall rally, as of yore, Whatever nurtures in them still The faith that thrills the brave heart's core,
And 'courages the constant will.

And they who suffered and stood fast
That justice might the weak uphold Shall come into their own at last:
Their blessings shall be manifold.

And in its death-throes Tyranny Shall see the dusk of ruin stain
Its capitals, and, blightinglly,
Fire mosque, and minaret, and fane.

And when the Maori takes his stand
On London Bridge's crumbling walls,
To limm—perchance with trembling hand—
“The broken ruin of St. Paul's”

Then, then, O Ireland! thou who brought Forth men of wisdom and of worth,
Ere Pharaohs ruled, or Cæsars fought,
Or Christ came down to save this earth—

Then, then, O Motherland! shalt thou
Still stand resplendent, fair, and free,
Victor and vanquished to endow
With thine own love of liberty.

*Ireland! this is my song of you—
This is the song I give your sons
(Patriots all, and staunch and true),
To sing in despite of the brattling guns.*

THE CAPTURE OF THE CANNON.

(A Ballad of the Williamite Wars, A.D. 1690).

ALL on a starless August morn
Ere yet the first cock crew, Brave Sarsfield took, from Limerick town,
The road to Killaloe.

He gave the word, then fleetly spurred
By darkened vale and fen,
And he sang this song, as he rode along
At the head of five hundred men :

*The Dutch steal down from Cashel town
With powder and ball and cannon,
And flat tin-boats to use as floats
In the marshes of the shannon ;
But their guns we'll thieve, and their guns we'll leave
Their mouths the brown earth under,
Pile powder and ball, tin-boats and all,
And we'll blow the heap asunder.*

They rode to do ! they rode to die !

They rode more fleetly than the wind,
Till a castle-towered before them lowered
And Limerick town lay far behind.

To Ballyneety's towers they came

Ere two of the clock had chimed,
And they spake no words, but they loosed their swords,
And rode with their muskets primed.

And Sarsfield halted his cavalcade

All in the tree-lined road ;
In the saddle he turned, and his bright
eyes burned,
Like discs of fire they glowed ;

Vnd he drew his sword, then he gave the word

And they swept on their enemy,
And as muskets crashed, and sabres flashed,
They thundered right merrilie :

Ho ! ho ! you're down from Cashel town
With powder and ball and cannon,

*And your flat tin-boats to use as floats And ferry ye o'er the Shannon ;
But your guns we'll take, and your guns we'll stake
Their mouths the brown earth under,
Pile powder and ball, tin-boats and all,
And we'll blow the heap asunder.*

No man they spared when their swords they bared
Till the ground was strewn with dead,
Till like stark hosts of dawn-caught ghosts
The Dutchmen broke and fled.

And when his band at his stern command Back in from their routing rode, Brave Sarsfield's eyes in the darkness burned,
Like discs of fire they glowed.

Quoth he : " Well done ! well fought and won !
Now carry ye out my plan,
For " Sarsfield " is the word, my men,
And Sarsfield is the man ! "

Ere the order slipped from his lips they gripped

The cannon and dragged them forth, They loaded them well with powder and shell

And jammed their mouths in the earth.

And Sarsfield smiled as his soldiers piled On top of the loaded cannon,
The flat tin boats to be used as floats
In the marshes of the Shannon.

And over the plain they laid a train
Of powder, then rode away,
O'er dying and dead the cavalcade sped
Ere the east 'gan growing grey.

Then anon came a flash, a quivering flash,
And a bright white blinding flare !
It seemed as though Heaven asunder was riven

For a crash rent the morning air,
That rumbled the ground for leagues around

And shuddered the hills of Clare !

.

And Sarsfield halted his cavalcade
All in the tree-lined road,
In the saddle he turned, and his bright
eyes burned,
Like discs of fire they glowed.

And he sheathed his sword then fleetly spurred
By brightening hill and down,
And he sang this song, as he rode along
To the gates of Limerick town :

*The Dutch crept down from Cashel town
With powder and ball and cannon,
And their flat tin boats to use as floats
In the marshes of the Shannon ;
But their ranks we cleft, and their guns we left
Their mouths the brown earth under,
Piled powder and ball, tin boats and all,
And we blew the heap asunder.*

THE BRIDGE OF ATHLONE.

(A Ballad of the Williamite Wars, 1691).

WHEN Ginkell came before Athlone
With horse, and foot, and cannon, Quoth he: "I'll breach yon mouldering
walls,
And then I'll cross the Shannon!"

"Aim straight! aim straight! my gunners true,
Wipe out yon Irish rabble,
And cleave those walls with cannon balls,
As swiftly as thou'rt able!"

The grim Dutch gunners eyed the town,
They primed their cannon fairly,
And Ginkell laughed for the bursting shells
They missed the bastions rarely.

Then up and spake the brave Fitzgerald—
Above the cannon crashes—“ The Dutch have blazed and cleft and razed
Athlone’s old walls to ashes ;

“ And even now they do prepare
 With horse, and foot, and cannon,
To take our town if they can win
 The bridge across the Shannon.”

Then up and spake a sergeant brave :
 “ Who’ll make the Dutchmen wonder,
And laugh in the teeth of bloody Death,
 And hack yon bridge asunder ?”

Stepped forth eleven goodly men—
 Greybeards, and youths, and yeomen ;
Aye, even the wounded cried for leave
 To meet their foreign foemen !

Out on the bridge the Irish rushed “ For God and Ireland !” crying,
And stood in a hell of seething shell,
 Stout axe and crowbar plying.

But musketeers and grenadiers
Full soon those braves did slaughter,
And warm blood dripped, thro' beams half-ripped,
And dyed the Shannon water.

Twelve more brave hearts leaped forth, nor feared
The muskets deadly humming,
And a wall of Irish flesh and blood Barred well the Dutch on-coming.

St. Ruth rode up, St. Ruth rode down,
Upon the Connacht border,
And Ginkell lined, for one mad charge,
His cavaliers in order—

Then spake; and smoke-grimed soldiers sped,
But lo! with thunderous crashes
That thrill all hearts the corpse-strewn bridge
Into the torrent dashes!

And only two of that fearless band
Of greybeards, youths, and yeomen,
E'er lived to hear the ringing cheer
That broke from friends and foemen.

.

When Ginkell came before Athlone
With horse, and foot, and cannon, Quoth he: "I'll breach yon mouldering
walls,
And then I'll cross the Shannon!"

With cannon balls he breached the walls,
But his gunners were not able To quell the dauntless spirit
Of the Irish hero-rabble.

And folk still sing the noble deed
Throughout our sorrowed sireland, Christ send us more like the twenty-four Brave men who bled for Ireland.

A BALLAD OF '98 HEROES.

HERE'S to the men who, for Ireland's sake,
Were banished across the sea, Prisoned, pitch-capped, flayed at the stake,
Or hung on the gallows-tree;
And here's to the heroes who, pike in hand,
Lay rotting on battle plain Because they had planned
To make our Land
A Nation once again.

Tone's throat was slit in Kilmainham Jail,
Young Emmet cut up half hung;
How they hacked Fitzgerald to death 's a tale—
For shame's sake—better unsung;

Father Murphy was shot before Arklow
While leading a hopeless fray,
And treacherous foe
Hung MacCracken, Munroe,
And sent Dwyer to Botany Bay.

Here's to the men who inspired the war
Soul-bittered by Ireland's tears :
MacNevin, Bond, Addis Emmet, Orr, Tandy, O'Connor, and Shears ;
When with England's legions they strove to cope
They were hounded down like slaves,
And if, like Hope,
They escaped the rope
Were branded as cowardly knaves.

Here's to the Nameless Unnumbered
Dead
Who battled for Ireland's weal, Ne'er fearful of whirlwind showers of lead
Or glittering lines of steel ;
And here's to the living whose hearts were wrung

When they found themselves alone :
 Their women-folk strung,
 Or raped, or hung,
Their babes on the dung-heap thrown.

Then here's to the pikemen and musketeers
Who fought with such right good will,
We've honoured their names for an hundred years,
We boast of their bravery still ;
And we're sprung from their sturdy seed, and we
Will fight as they fought of yore—Aye, if needs be Till eternity—
Till we free our Land once more.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS AND BALLADS

A CHURL'S SONG OF CHRISTMAS.

A.D. 1300.

O-MORROW will be Christ's birthday,
And we, poor churls, will all make gay

And spend our Yuletide gaily ;
Nor out to plough the gafol plot,
Or thatch the barley-ricks, I wot,
Or sweat as we do daily,
Or mast the hogs, or bank the ditch,
Or skin the beeves, or salt the flich,
Or in the barths go redding ;
But we the tegs will fastle fast,
Well-foddered, and till Yule is past
Toil none in tower or steading.

*And so, I prithee, merrie be
In joy of Christ's Nativitie ;
And wassail, wassail, wassail sing
In honour of our Lord and King.*

And when the sacring-bell hath rung,
And when the priest his Mass hath sung
 A-down to board we'll frolic ;
And when our lord hath ta'en his place,
And good Friar Anslem's mumbled
 " Grace,"

 In meat and mead we'll rollick.
And knight and 'squire, and clerk and priest,
And churl, and wight, and wench will feast,

 On what their eyes may hap on—
For there'll be boar's-head, roasted quail, Plum-porridge, veal, and sweetened ale,
 And mallard, goose, and capon.

*And so, I prithee, merrie be
In joy of Christ's Nativitie ;
And wassail, wassail, wassail sing
In honour of our Lord and King.*

And, after meat, the minstrel-mimes
Will troll for us their merrie rhymes,
 And we will romp and revel,
And 'plaud buffons and jugglers too,

And cozen with the wenches who Will kiss without a cavil ;
 The mummers we will jape and cheer,
 We'll bourd, and bawl, and sing, nor fear
 The frown of lord or neighbour,
 And we will carol joyfulie
 To merrie song and melodie
 Of flagelot and tabor.

*And so, I prithee, merrie be
 In joy of Christ's Nativitie ;
 And wassail, wassail, wassail sing
 In honour of our Lord and King.*

And yet, from dawn till even-dim,
 Our chiefest thoughts shall be of Him
 Whom God the Father gave us,
 Who came to this bleak earth to live,
 His Heart's most precious Blood to give,
 And from the Pit to save us.
 And so, at times, we'll pause from play
 And sign the Cross and lowly pray
 To Christ, the swaddled Stranger,
 Who blest mankind that Christmas morn
 When He, all houseless and forlorn, Lay shivering in a manger.

*And so, I prithee, pray with me
In joy of Christ's Nativitie ;
And wassail, wassail, wassail sing
In honour of our Lord and King.*

HOC DIE DOMINUS NOSTER NASCITUR.

O wind the silvern horn,
And pluck the angelot string,
And viol, lute, and flute make play
For Jesus Christ, the King.
For Jesus Christ, the King.

And as ye wandering go Chant joyously this lay—
Till earth and sea and sky do ring—
“ The Christ is born to-day !
The Christ is born to-day ! ”

No instrument have I
To serve my singing need,
Yet I, too, fain would pipe His praise
Though't be upon a reed,
Though't be upon a reed.

But ye with silvern horn,
Lute, flute and angelot,
Sing carols meet and blithe and sweet,
For Christ the God-Begot,
For Christ the God-Begot.

MARY'S SONG TO JESUS.

ROCK-A-BY, hush-a-by, lo, I sing,
Flesh of my flesh! my Son,
my King,
King Kaspar, lord of many lands,
Doth ride this night to Bethlehem
(O camel bells across the sands!)
To kiss Thy swaddling garment's hem—
Yet Thou sleepest to the sad sleep-song
I sing;
Look up for a space from my breast, my King,
That Thy mother may kiss Thy rose-bud Mouth,
More sweet than the spice of the fragrant south.

Rock-a-by, hush-a-by, lo, I sing,
Blood of my blood! my Son, my King,
And King Balthasar, mile on mile,

Doth sail at dawn and even dim
(O plashing oars adown the Nile !)
To see my Jesus smile at him—
Yet Thou sleepest to the sad sleep-song
I sing ;
Awaken and croodle and croon, my
King,
And Thy mother will kiss Thy Hands and Feet,
Dimpled and delicate, white and sweet.

Rock-a-by, hush-a-by, lo, I sing,
Bone of my bone ! my Son, by King,
King Melchior, ere the last star wanes,
Shall kneel and lay before Thee there (O signal fires across the plains !) Pure gold and frankinsense and mhyrr—
Yet Thou sleepest to the sad sleep-song
I sing ;
Ah, Thou shiverest there on the straw,
my King,
Come ! Thy mother these swaddling clothes will part
And keep Thee warmer against her heart.

Rock-a-by, hush-a-by, lo, I sing,
Life of my life ! my Son, my King,
 The shephards throng this stable door
 To greet the Father's Holy One (O gleaming star that moves no more !)
 To greet the Light whence light began—Yet Thou sleepest to the sad sleep-song
 I sing ;
Ah, open Thy sleepy Eyes, my King,
That Thy mother may see her baby smile—
A baby Thou'lt be such a little while !

Rock-a-by, hush-a by, lo, I sing,
Soul of my soul ! my Son, my King,
 Thy Father's angels, in Thy praise,
 Breathe forth the songs of Paradise (O host more bright than stars' bright rays !)
 And crave but one glance of Thine
 Eyes—
Yet Thou sleepest to the sad sleep-song
 I sing ;

Canst hear them hail Thee their Lord and King?

Smile up at these makers of Heavenly song,

And the kings and shephards that round
Thee throng.

Rock-a-by, hush-a-by, lo, I sing,
Why doest Thou sleep so long, my King?
Thou seemest dead—Thou liest so still!
Ah, yes! Thou dreamest we must part

(O gaunt stark Cross on Calvary's Hill!)

And so creep'st closer to my heart—
And sleepest to the sad sleep-song I sing.
My Jesus, my Baby, my God, my King, Oh, promise Thy mother Thou'lt ne'er forget

Of this night when Thy Face with her tears were wet.

A BALLAD OF BETHLEHEM.

FROM a field nigh the cave where Christ was born,
What though no fragrant rose-trees blossom there—
The Chroniclers tell—each Christmas morn
The sweet perfume of roses fills the air.

In all good sooth, 'tis meet that this should be ;
For in this field, of yore, by God's White Hand
Were formed and fashioned with all delicacy
The first rose-blooms beheld in any land.

The Judges and the Scribes of Bethlehem
In council had condemned a maid to die

For that she would not sin with one of them
 But valued more than life her chastity.

The while they dragged her from the judgment-halls
 The people spat on her, and rent her dress,
Till that she reached the fields outside the walls Torn, bruised, and shivering in her nakedness.

And there prone on her face, she prayed this prayer :
 “ Sweet Christ ! an’t be Thy Will that I should die,
I am content as I am ’neath Thy care,
 But Thou vouchsafe to prove my purity.”

While yet she prayed, they dragged her to the stake
 And bound her fast with chains no fire could burn ;

And as they piled the faggots, mockers spake :

“Well merited the death all harlots earn!”

They fired the pile wherein she meekly stood,

And watched the flames about her frail limbs roam ;

But, lo ! the brands changed to roses red as blood !

The flames to sprays of roses white as foam !

The Judges and the Scribes of Bethlehem
In council had condemned this maid to
die

For that she would not sin with one of
them,

But valued more than life her chastity.

And while they dragged her from the judgment halls

The people spat on her, and rent her
dress,

Till that she lay outside their city walls Bruised, shamed, and shivering in her nakedness.

But there God proved her holy purity ;
For there, near Bethlehem, by His own Hand
He formed and fashioned with all
delicacy
The first rose-blossoms known in any land.

And, as He changed the brands to roses
red,
Or, as He changed the flames to roses
white,
May He change sinful hearts, and on each head
Shed down unceasingly the grace of Light.
Amen.

AN OLD ENGLISH YULE-SONG

YUR good liege-lord, King Arthur, lies
This Yule at toweréd Camelot,
And hither he hath bidden his court
To keep the feast of Christ, I wot !
What then though nor'land winds blow cool,
And she-wolves roam the country-side,
In revelry and carolling
We'll pass this joyous Christmastide—

*Sing Heigh lolly lolly lo !
Let serfmen and freemen,
Cowléd friar, and knight and 'squire
Join the mumming gleemen.*

And though our lord's leal knights will miss Sir Gawain, the courtly and the good,

Who fares to smite the fierce Green Knight

In his dark northern solitude ;
Gramercy ! he'll return betimes
When he hath taken blow for blow :
Upheld the fame of Arthur's court,
And made the eyttyn's blood to flow—

*Sing Christ Jesu, Mary's Son,
Swaddled in a manger,
Strengthen good Sir Gawain's arm
And shield him from danger.*

And when the Mass-priest sings the Mass,
And we have sent the poor away
With bulging wallet-bags, we'll out
To watch the knights at tourney-play ;
And when the pole-star glitters bright
We'll back into the banquet-hall,
And there'll be minstrelsey and cheer,
And meat and mead enough for all—

*Sing Heigh lolly lolly lo !
Let serfmen, and freemen,
And maid and squire, never tire
Carolling with the gleemen.*

But though to-morrow we'll make gay,
To-night, I'll trow, we'll mindful be
Of Him who came on Christmas morn
To shed His Heart's Blood on the Tree.
So, hearth-wife, sweep and strew thine
house,
Leave door unpinned, and lanthorn lit,
And Mary and her Spouse, mayhap,
Will come and rest a space in it—

*Sing Christ Jesu, Mary's Son,
Poor homeless Stranger !
Make my house Thy birthing-place
And my heart Thy manger.*

OLD-WORLD BALLADS

THE MAD SON.

A Ballad of the Wars of the Roses, A.D. 1490.

WO red red roses burgeoned, Sing Heigh-ho! sing Heighdey!

*One rose is dead, one withering,
Christ rest you, gentle lady.*

Three men rode out thro' Exeter,
On palfreys white as white could be,
And one was a friar, and one a 'squire,
And one a lord of high degree.

As thro' the town they took their way,
A whisper sped from door to door,
The good priest looked nor left nor right,
But told his brown beads o'er and o'er.

The young 'squire told no rosary-beads,
His hands lay listless in his lap,
His pale cheeks looked the paler for
The red rose in his sable cap.

And ever as they rode along
He gazed before with yernful eyes,
And sang in quavering voice and low
A love-rune, in this piteous wise :

*Two red red roses burgeonéd,
Sing Heigh-ho ! sing Heigh-dey !
One rose is dead, one withering,
Christ rest you, gentle lady.*

And ever as they rode along
The Lord of Ware wept bitterly,
And beat his breast and moaned aloud :
“ Miserere Domine ! ”

“ No sire had nobler son than I,
Our race's strength lurked 'neath his brows,
But 'twas his will to wive with one Whose breed had fought the Red-Rose House.

“ ‘A slut!’ I cried ; and for my throat
I saw his hip-sword's murderous dash,
But lo, I neivelled him to earth
Swiftly as forkéd lightning's flash !

" I would the blow had reaved his life!
For now he roams my castle-lands
With ambling gait, or mute of lip Sits listlessly with twined hands.

" I would the blow had reaved his life!
But 'tis my penance, by Christ's grace,
To list his maffle-speech, and mark
The witless leer upon his face.

" The maid he would have wed with died
The hapless hour she came to know
The Lord of Ware had struck his heir,
And made an idiot with a blow.

" Somewise he knoweth she hath died,
And so with roses white and red,
Each Christ's-day, he doth ride to deck
A mound 'neath which he deems her laid.

" I, with my priest, do follow him
And kneel hard by while he doth sing
His witless song of roses red,
One dead and one fast withering."

.

Two men rode back thro' Exeter,
On palfreys white as white could be,
The Lord of Ware, and a cowléd friar,
Behind a mourning companie.

As thro' the town they took their way
A whisper sped from door to door,
And townsfolk bared their heads while passed
The bier their liege-lord's henchmen bore.

And as the grieved men rode along With low-hung heads and brimming
eyes,
They seemed to hear, far far away,
His love-rune sung in piteous-wise :

*Two red red roses, burgeonéd,
Sing Heigh-ho ! sing Heigh-dey !
One rose is dead, one withering,
Christ rest you, gentle lady.*

THE BALLAD OF FRIAR MARK.

HE hills loomed dim blue at the wane of day,
Their peaks by the red sun
kisst,
O'er the vale at their base, in white array,
Crept the hosts of evening mist.

But, heedless, Friar Mark sate beneath a tree
That grew by the river's bank,
His face grave and bright, alternately,
As his green float rose or sank.

Till, anon, he heard from his convent grey
The chimes of the vesper-bell,
And, crossing himself, he began to pray,
And his worn brown beads to tell.

From their hidden nests, in a leafy grove,
"Good-nights" chirped the feathery throng:

The holy man heard, raised his voice in love,
And joined in their even-song.

But, high o'er the throng singing sleepily,
One linnet sang blithe and clear :
"O Maker and Master who rul'st on High!
Send Thou an angel here."

And Christ heard, and sent from His Garth above
One angel down to this world of sin,
And, afterwards, smiled and spake words of love,
As He led two angels in.

SIR JOHN OF THE FENWOODS.

THE lady crept to her chamber When the bats were on the wing,
And the gold moon clomb thro' the star-ways
At the deep of evening ;

And she drew from a leathern wallet—
Embroidered with loving care—
A rose-red love-knot, and wove it Into her long dark hair.

And the while she braided her tresses
She sang of the Isle of Trees,
That lies, like a glimmering emerald,
In the Southern foam-flecked seas.

The halberdier paused 'neath the keep-tower,
The castle had fallen still ;
And a fragrant rose-bud fluttered
From her chamber window-sill.

He kissed it ; then passed thro' the keep-
tower,

Like a silent shadowy thing,
And he was 'ware, as he clomb the stair,
Of a dulcet lute-playing :

“Night and day, Sir John of the Fenwoods
Doth war on my dead sire's lands,
For that I swore his bearded lips
Would never kiss my hands :

“Not for all the odorous breathing spice
From the land of Araby,
Or myrrh, or frankincense, or gold,
Or pearls, or ivory—
Would I wed Sir John of the Fenwoods, Whose dark ships sail the sea.

“But the stranger who came in the mead-month
To serve at my beck and call—Though many a knight hath spake me fair—
I love him best of all.”

And he answered: "Sweet! ere the dawn-tide,

We'll away to the Isle of Trees
That lies, like a glimmering emerald,
In the Southern foam-flecked seas."

He kissed her brow, her lips, her throat,
Her heaving breast, her paly hands,
And spake: "I blame not him who warred Upon your spreading castle-lands!"

He saddled her a palfrey white,
Himself a dapple grey,
And thro' the sleeping men-at-arms
They rade ere white of day.

And the years speed by like day-dreams
On the quiet Isle of Trees
That lies, like a glimmering emerald,
In the Southern foam-flecked seas.

And oft, in her secret chamber,
When the bats are on the wing,
And the gold moon climbs thro' the star-ways
At the deep of evening,

She draws from a leathern wallet
Embroidered with loving care,
The love-knot the halberdier gave her,
And braids it into her hair.

.

And she wots not John of the Fenwoods
No longer wars on her lands :
She wots not John of the Fenwoods
Hath the leave to kiss her hands.

THE SIGN OF THE CROSS.

He walked across the chapel,
Between the oaken pews,
And beckoned me; I followed him
Out through the yews.

He whispered : " If you love me,
You'll not go back to pray :
But keep the shelter of my arms
Till red of day."

And, stooping down, he kissed me ;
His face was icy cold,
His lips were wet and clammy, like
The grave-yard mould.

I heard a bat flit by us,
I heard a watch-dog bark,
He gazed with seeming-sightless eyes
Into the dark ;

Then raised his hand and pointed
Across the meadow-dips,
And spake: "The earth lies on my eyes,
And 'twixt my lips."

He moved across the church-yard,
I followed where he led—
Sweet Christ! then I remembered
That he was dead!

Afar a cock 'gan crowing,
A watch-dog 'gan to bark,
He passed, with horror in his eyes,
Into the dark.

Would God I had not Crossed myself!
I'd not be left to moan, Alone, at the dawn's break, standing as Though turned to stone;

My love I might have followed
Across the meadow-dips,
What though the earth lay on my eyes
And 'twixt my lips.

MEMORIAL VERSES

THE HEALER.

(In memory of my friend, Francis Wisely, M.D., who died of wounds received at Gallipoli, Sept. 14th, 1915).

NOT yours to heed the battletrumpet's call,
And order slaughter with your latest breath,
Not yours locked in your comrades' ranks to fall,
But yours to clutch their bleeding forms from death.

And yours to wash their wounds, to soothe their cries,
And whisper them: "Though troubled of your scars—
Bear ye, for Justice' sake, and lift your eyes,
And set your foreheads to the flaming stars."

Friend of the healing hands ! rest now, and know

The fruits of your sweet ministerings they reap ;

That Time shall not your memory overthrow,

And your long sleep shall be no barren sleep.

THE COMFORTER.

(To a gentle and saintly kinswoman on the death of her sister, April, 1915).

NOT to the Dead my tribute, but to thee,

O strong staunch heart! 'tis thine by every right.

The road thou walkest sweeps into the night,
And yet thou walkest on—unflatteringly.

And when thy worn soul beats against the bars,

Surely unto His angels Christ will say:

“To guide that soul, upon her Me-ward way,

Hang ye the darkened skies with silver stars!”

And when within the Garth thou stand'st apart

Wherein our gentle Saviour fashioneth

The charity whereof, at times of death, Thou brought'st sweet ministrations to each heart.

We, of thy house, who saw thee wearied With prayer and watch for kin and stranger too,
Will whisper of the griefs thy brave heart knew,
And tear-wet hands will make and smooth thy bed.

SACRED VERSES

TO THE MAN GOD.

I CRAVE Thee, O Man-God !

Guide Thou me thro' my length of days,

That I may learn to walk for Thee

The austere ways

That Thou hast trod

For me, for very me.

And if I daily fret or grieve,

Because I cannot understand,

Give Mary leave

And she will tell

White Gabriel

Or Uriel

To come and take me by the hand,

And lead me thro' this sorrow-land,

Away, away,

To where I may

Journey amidst the sweetest sounds,

And breathe, thro' the eternal hours,

The fragrant sweetness of the flowers—

The Five Red Flowers that are Thy Wounds.

THE CRY OF THE PENITENT.

SWEET, did you meet King
Love this even?
This windy valley He wandered thro' ;

And, did He sadly turn on you
Eyes blue as the cobalt deeps of Heaven?

Around His bleeding Brows shone seven Crimson poppies a-gleam with dew;
Sweet, did you meet King Love this even?
This windy valley He wandered thro'.

Mine aching heart is sorrow-riven :
He passed thro' the haze of lilac-blue That hides the pyre of the sun from view,
And left my stained soul unshriven.
Sweet, did you meet King Love this even?

THE BIRTH OF DAY.

HE breath of God, the wind, hath swept away
The sombre sable shades of Night

From o'er the vast cathedral of the East ;
Lo, from its lancet-windows, bright Beams glint o'er hill, and moor, and dale, and lawn.

Prostrate, I thank Thee, Mighty Priest !
Again Thy wondrous gracious Hand doth
light

The golden sanctuary-lamp of Day
With the thin white tapers of the Dawn.

A SONG OF HOPE.

SORROWED heart! before
the world
Lieth wan in its winding-sheet,

Thou wilt be wafted hence and whirled
To gentle Jesus' piercéd Feet.

The prayers from lowly peasant-hearth,
High-toweréd hall, proud bastioned dun,
And silent saintly cloister-garth,
Will reach the Father's Holy One :

And, happy in His skiey Home,
All-happy in His own God-Mood,
His Voice will bid thee: "Cease to roam,
Come to My Heart's glad quietude."

And He will place thee where He lists,
Perchance full-lowly, nigh the stars—
Bright tinkling trinkets at the wrists
Of angels—nigh the portal bars.

Or, mayhap, thou shalt higher be Anear the Maid of Moonéd Brows,
Who'll turn to very ecstasy
The sorrow of thy wasting woes ;

But, high or low, before the world
Lieth wan in its winding-sheet,
Thou wilt be wafted hence and whirled
To gentle Jesus' piercéd Feet.

THE CROSS.

SAW the gaunt stark Cross of Christ
Loom dark against a wrack-dark sky,
I saw the bruised Man-God up-triced
Between two thieves, to bleed and die.
I heard the winds shriek frenziedly,
I saw the graves give up their dead
The heavens riven luridly
With forkéd lightnings flaming-red.

I saw the gaunt stark Cross of Christ,
I saw the Saviour of the world,
To please His Father, sacrificed
Lest earthlings into Hell be hurled.
I heard the planets' hearts athrob,
The elemental forces rave,
And the one great convulsive sob,
That, when He died, the whole earth gave.

I saw the gaunt stark Cross of Christ,
I saw the dead God hang on it,
The cloak for which the soldiers diced,
The spear with which His Side was slit;
I saw the cruel crown of thorn,
I saw the Blood from every wound
That left His Body maimed and torn Congealing slowly on the ground.

I saw the gaunt stark Cross of Christ
Gleam blood-wet 'gainst a blood-red sun,
But, ere His Life He sacrificed—
That God the Father's Will be done—
His Eyes, from which Blood-tears did creep,
He turned on me! and, since then I
Do think for Him all men should weep
From they are born until they die.

I saw the gaunt stark Cross of Christ—
If what I saw I could rehearse,
The firmament would be incised
With what I'd speak in thunderous verse!

And this poor song whose life shall be More fleet than frost-nipped nenuphar's,
Would live for all eternity,
And hear the death-knell of the stars.

FREE TRANSLATIONS FROM THE IRISH

A BARD'S LAMENT OVER HIS CHILDREN.

RIVER of great kings and sons of kings!

O river of swift bark and silver fish!

O Boyne once famed for battle-frays and
sports,

And heroes of the regal race of Conn!

Art thou grey-grown for all thy comeliness?

O agéd woman of the grey-green pools!

O sorrowed Boyne! O stream of many tears!

Where gone the golden glory of thy sires?
The fame of mighty Art, and wise
Meltain—

Art of the Arrows, Meltain of the Spears—
Sons of the hero-house of the O'Neill?
To thee, of yore, belonged red victory,

When fires of Fenian wrath were kindled well,
And blood-smeared bridles clanked on foaming steeds,
As leaguéd legions swept to venging war.

O river of great kings and sons of kings !
O river of swift bark and silver fish !
I lay my blessings on thee with my tears—
For thou wilt watch forever o'er the grave Wherein my treasures sleep, close by thy side ;
O agéd woman of the grey-green pools !
O sorrowed Boyne ! O stream of many tears !

There lie my sons in all their lusty strength,
There lies my girl in all her budding charms—
Rory and Brian with their sister, Rose.
These have I given sore against my will,
O deep dark grave to thee ! They were myself,
My life, my love, my flesh, my blood, my bone.

The blessings of all men were on the three,
The blessings of the folk that loved them
well,
From Holy Kells to ancient Drogheda.
May peace be on this grave wherein they lie
Beside thy waters, royal stream of kings!
Here in the spreading lands of the O'Neill.

O river of great kings and sons of kings!
O river of swift bark and silver fish!
O Boyne once famed for battle frays and
sports
And heroes of the regal race of Conn!
O agéd woman of the grey-green pools!
I lay my blessings on thee with my tears.

THE LAMENT OF CREDHE OVER CAEL.

THE harbour roareth o'er the rushing race
Of yon grim point—The Head-land of the Storms ;
Its white-crowned waves are wailing on the strand :
The Slayer of Finnachta of the Teeth,
The Hundred-Killer, Leinster's bravest liege,
Cael, the son of Crimthann, is no more!
Cael, the Fighting-Man, hath passed away!

The waves of Tulcha Leis that rise and fall,
And tower and break, are sighing in this wise :
The Fearless One whose hairy hand hath felled

Strong-hearted chiefs and wizard warriors, Whose battle-shield ne'er cried in craven fear,
Cael, the son of Crimthann, is no more!
Cael, the Fighting-Man, hath passed away!

Woe! in the Pleasant Ridge the thrush's cry
Is pityful, and saddening to the heart;
In Leiter Laeig the blithesome blackbird sings
A sorrow-rann : its voice is full of tears.

Woe! in the marshy places of the Ridge
Of Strong Men, I can hear the loud-voiced crane :
Piteously and sorrowfully she keens :
She cannot save her nestlings, for the fox—
The white fanged fox—doth rend her little ones.

Woe! from the Ridge of Lights there comes to me
The sobbing of the stag : he wails alone
For in Druim Silenn lieth dead his hind.

Woefully roars the harbour o'er the race !
Woefully wail the waves of Tulcha Leis !
No more the mad thrush lilts its merry lay !

No more the blackbird pipes its scolding
song !

Wildly the crane cries o'er her mangled young !

Loudly the stag lows o'er his slaughtered hind !

But there is greater grief in my lament,
And deeper searing sorrow in my heart,
For he was all to me : lord, love, and life.
His beauty often put my wits astray !
And now, I kneel in tears, his dear dark
head

Pillowed upon a clod of spume-wet grass ;
His fingers twined in mine, my face on his ;

What can I do but weep and pray the Gods
That they may join us soon, ah ! very soon.

LOVE SONGS

THERE IS A LAND WHERE OLEANDERS BLOW.

(A SONG FROM A LONG DRAMATIC POEM)

THERE is a land where oleanders blow,
And ever dream dim dreams
from dusk till dawn,
Where fragrant pomegranates forever rear
The gorgeous golden glory of their blooms.

There is a land where white magnolias—
Swaying as softly as the sparkling waves,
Front the dull-green ilexis, like the surf
That foams about the base of basalt-cliffs.

There is a land where poppies, creamy-
white,
Waver serenely to the west-wind's tune,
Where new-blown roses, red as living blood,
Breathe forth the very essence of their souls.

There is a land where happy honey-flowers

Mingle their sweets with vales of violets, Foam-white and purple, dewy-eyed and
fair,

Thither we twain will wend our way—and rest.

CHOPIN'S 7TH PRELUDE.

CANNOT bring the flowers
That I was wont to bring,
I cannot sing the songs
That I was wont to sing :

My garth is tangled grown,
My rose-trees witheréd,
And I am sad at heart
For my fond hopes are dead.

Pale rosemary and rue
The only flowers I bring,
Songs of the death of Love
The only songs I sing ;
Pale rosemary and rue
Over your grave I spread—Oh, for the deep sweet sleep
Of lovers that are dead !

A BORDER-LAIRD'S LOVE-SONG.

HE'D hae huntin' hawks an' hounds,
Toweréd ha's and bowers shadey,
Tree-busked walks, an' flower-laid grounds,
Gin she'd be my winsome lady.

She'd hae herds o' glossy kine, Siller store, an' richest treasure,
Gin her licht feet tripped wi' mine
Thro' the stately marriage-measure.

She'd hae jewelled rings tae wear,
Leathern shoon and sendall dresses,
Flimsy silks tae gar her fair,
Gowden braid tae bind her tresses.

She'd be 'tentit nicht an' day,
Thoughts o' former wrinklín' labour
Minstrel-wights would soothe away
Wi' mellow oboe, lute, and tabor.

I would scale the mountain peaks,
I would plough the heavin' water,
Did my comin' light the cheeks
O' the salmon-fisher's daughter.

AVE ET SALVE.

THE highest hills in the mists are hidden,
The flowers you gave me
are witheréd ;

You shall go hence, by me unhidden—
For all the dreams that I dreamed are dead.

You came, of old, unsought, unbidden,
And gave me your mouth so soft and
red ;

You shall go hence, by me unhidden—
For all the dreams that I dreamed are dead.

I gave you my love ; and the heart you hid in
At your faintest sigh like a new wound
bled ;

You shall go hence, by me unhidden—
For all the dreams that I dreamed are dead.

MISCELLANEOUS PIECES

THE SPHINX.

ETHINKS that thou wert old,
O Silent One !
Ere Pasht on her first votaries did frown,

And still thou look'st the teeming centuries down,
Half-cynically, from thy vast desert throne.

Thou'st seen Tyre, Nineveh, and Babylon, Crumble like lotus-leaves ; kings of renown,

Who first made history, in Time's surges drown ;
And dusts of mighty empires starward blown.

Yet, I believe, should I creep, stealthily,
When with pale stars the dark-green skies are dight,
To where thou crouchest brooding on the world—

That I would hear from thy stone heart a cry

For mankind's present suffering and earth's plight,

What though thine æon-mute lips in scorn seem curled.

APRIL.

I loved you, gentle maiden,
With a tender love and true,
And, longingly, oft searched for you Through greening glens, ere yet your laughter
(Sighed for, sought for, followed after)
Thro' the budded branches ringing
Set the new-come birds a-singing,
Till I spied you coming laden
With sweet yellow daffodils.

Now you are gone again, sweet maiden,
May comes tripping o'er the hills,
Carolling to the leaping rills;
But though her merry music thrills
My soul, I'll ne'er forget you, maiden,
Or your rippling girlish laughter
(Sighed for, sought for, followed after)
As you came to meet me, laden
With sweet yellow daffodils.

THE LINNET'S SONG.

WALK on alone, and let me lie
Upon the violet-covered banks
Of this cool softly-crooning stream ;

And, as the sparkling sunbeams kiss
Its bosom, I will muse and dream :
I'll tender Christ my heart-felt thanks
For such a perfect day as this ;
I'll watch the clouds sail by
And search them, as they pass, for poetry,
I'll list the linnnet in yon grove
Pour forth its song of passionate love ;
And, friend, I pray, think not of me,
For I could lie the glad day long
A-listening to a linnnet's song
And never lonely be.

ALIA TENTANDA VIA EST.

THE lean and leafless trees are darkly set Against enangered skies that no stars dight,
And far-off voices call me onward yet,
Though I am weary, Melancholy Night!

The hollow way with sharpéd thorns was strewn,
With jagged crags and rocks the rugged height,
My feet are bleeding, cans't not hear me moan?

Hast thou no pity, Melancholy Night?

I have gained all: and I have nothing gained!

The years leer round with faces drawn and white,
My sandals are out-worn, my cloak mire-stained,
My strength is broken, Melancholy
Night!

The dark wraiths lured me to the topmost peaks

(I stand tear-blinded in the waning light,
I shall not see a new dawn's silver streaks)

May I not rest now, Melancholy Night?

Fairer my love than Petrarch's love;
more fair

Than Beatrice; or Tasso's heart'sdelight;

Give me to kiss once more her fragrant hair—

My heart is breaking, Melancholy
Night!

I've clomb so high God's glimmering camp above

Is very near; then pity my sad plight; Give me back youth and strength and hope and love,

Or Death's clay arms, O Melancholy
Night.

THE ART OF AUSTIN DOBSON.

WHEN I read Austin Dobson I seem to be whirled Far away from the roar of this work-a-day world
With its aeroplanes, engines, and fleet
 motor-cars,
That hiss by with shrill screaming and
 hooting that jars,
To the old-fashioned days of Politeness
 and Quiet,
When even the hedgerows ne'er dared to
 run riot,
But were fashioned and clipped with a neat sedate primness
(Like Dobson's own verses renowned for their trimness).

I can picture myself, at the Even's composure,
With Prue, arm-in-arm, in the garden's enclosure :
On his favourite seat, in the shade, Father's sitting,
"Churchwarden" alight, watching Mother
a-knitting ;
We leave them and pass down the path to the phlox,
Or pause by the flauntingly-proud hollyhocks ;
Ere we come to the hives we can hear the bees humming
And droning, like Mall-gossips, going and coming.

Or, I picture myself at The Cheese, in a corner,
And as pleased with my "Pie" as was little Jack Horner ; Soon old Johnson stumps in from the Play, bringing Burke
And Goldsmith, and soon they are all hard at work,

And twixt monthfuls of "Pie," "Toasted Cheese," "Marrow-Bones"

The Doctor holds forth in his dogmatic tones :

"I'll wager a crown The Mistakes of a Night, Sir,
Has given the Kellys a terrible fright, Sir."

Or, I fancy, when Spring robes the Park in new-green,

And the smallest of buds on the trees may be seen,

That I move thro' the walks of St. James'
in my chair

With the ease of a Great Person taking the air.

Or, I strut at Vauxhall, 'mid perfumed furbelows,

And ogle the maids with the best of the beaux ;

And I muse, at the end of the gay masquerade :

"Was 't my lady I kisst, or her ladyship's maid ?"

Or, on closing his Poems, in a post-chaise
 I sit,
 Pretending to laugh at the quips of a
 "wit."

Though fearful, on Bagshot Heath, Turpin will try

To hold-up the creaking well-packed Plymouth Fly;

And I hear—when we're all safe and snug in The Dragon—

Loud boasts from the depths of the young Ensign's flagon:

"If our journey Sir Dick had attempted to mar,

I'd have taken his head to adorn Temple Bar."

'Tis a wonderful world that I live in indeed,

What time I his well-worn Collected Poems read:

'Tis the world of the Dutch kings, the Press-gang, the Fleet,

Of well-gravelled garden, and ill-cobbled street,

Of laces, silks, satins, fans, periwigs, patches,
Of dice-throwing, cock-fighting, duellingmatches,
Wherein Virtue was never exactly abhorred—
And where mightier far than the pen was the sword.

When I read Austin Dobson I seem to be whirled Far away from the roar of this work-a-day world,
With its aeroplanes, engines, and fleet
 motor-cars,
That hiss by with shrill screaming and
 hooting that jars,
To the old-fashioned days of Politeness
 and Quiet,
When even the hedgerows ne'er dared to
 run riot,
But were fashioned and clipped with a
 neat sedate primness
(Like Dobson's own verses renowned for their trimness).

TO MADELINE.

OUR love is like a star that sheds soft rays
Of gleaming amber light to guide my feet ;

Your love is like a rose, wind-blown and sweet,
Whose lasting fragrance perfumes all my days ;
Your love is like a melodie that strays
From Paradisal lutes High-God to greet,
A poignant thing that makes my life complete,
And is too great for my weak-worded praise.

Your love is like a star and like a rose,
All-bright and fragrant ; like a melodie
That lifts the heart and soul to God
above ;

And, day succeeding day, the chastlier grows,

And, thro' my nights and days abides with me,

Yea, like a holy unseen presence,
love!

THE DREAM-TELLER.

WAS a dreamer : I dreamed
A dream at the dark of dawn, When the stars hung over the mountains
And morn was wan.

I dreamed my dream at morn,
At noon, at the even-light,
But I told it to you, dark woman,
One soft glad night.

And the sharing of my dream
Has brought me only this :
The gnawing pain of loss, the ache
For your mouth to kiss.

I walked the high hills, last night,
And lo, where the pale stars gleam, God's cold Voice spake : " If you dream again,
Tell none your dream ;
Tell none your dream ! "

AN ENDING.

YOU came, last night, and stood beside my bed, Bent low, and pressed my lips in gentlewise ;
Then crept away, in tears, at dawn's rose-red
With all the world of sorrow in your eyes.

I pray I may not dream of you again !
I ache for sleep to soothe and strengthen me,
To bear the gnawing agonizing pain
You gave me with your kisses—thoughtlessly.

It breaks my heart to know you dream,
my sweet,
I cannot bid you love me—Love is
dead !
And Hope has wandered by with bleeding feet
To walk the lonely star-ways overhead.

MANANAN MacLIR.

MANANAN MacLIR hath come up to-night
From his coral-house in the dark-grey deep ;

At the base of the cliffs where the sea-birds sleep
He stalks, and his king-robe of nacreous
white Gleams bright as a she-wolf's fangs bared to bite.

The thunders are crashing, the wild winds sweep,
As the fair Sidhe-maids o'er the crag-tops peep,
To mark the old man by each flash of light.

Ay, the Sidhe-maids fear Mananan MacLir !

For one of them, fair as a rose in June,

Was carried away by the sea-king far,
Far under the seas, where he married her ;
And she ne'er again saw the sun or the moon
Or the wavering light of each silver star.

A PRAYER TO GOD THE FATHER FOR THE WORLD.

ORD God of Hosts, in these wrath-days of death Raise one in Ireland who with flaming words
Will hymn Thy glory and our eldern faith,
And hurl a withering curse on dripping swords.

Inspire his soul that he may speak to man—

In such enthundered tones as Thou employed
When in the stark Beginning Thou began
To call the systems from the vast dark
Void ;

Or, in such wise as Thou to Adam spake,
To Noah, or to Abraham—and awe

As Thou did'st when Thou mad'st the heavens quake—

What time Thou gav'st the Tables of the Law.

Let him be strong of purpose, and ne'er
cease

Till he bequeathe this 'nobling heritage;
And may Fame's bugles wind his song of peace

Around the world, while rolleth age on age.

For sore are men in need of such a song
To lure their spirits back to Thee, dread Lord!

For now the righteous are the thralls of Wrong,
And hands that raised the chalice grasp
the sword.

And with wild mirth the hosts of Hell carouse

To see the earthlings Jesus died to save

Make of their star a desolate charnel-
house,
And in His Cross's place enthrone the glaive ;

And labour, frenziedly, thro' days and nights Seeking new means to swathe their brothers down,
For now, most lauded he who maims and blights,
And wins by Murder's red path, to renown.

Thy Son, our gracious Saviour, weep'st (and meet
It is that He should weep all-bitterly)
To see this once-green earth bepooled with gleet
By man in more-than-primal savagery.

Yea, He must writhe to see its fairest parts

All-disembowelled and cindered with white flame, Dunged and re-dunged with shattered human hearts
By puny kings who slaughter in Thy Name.

Lord God! we wot our own grim sires made war—
That Ireland's life-blood oozed for centuries,
That only now Time healeth her last scar,
That only now Hope dryeth her sad
eyes.

But if our fathers warred, and righteously Burst in black fury on the hosts that sought
Our shores, 'twas not from lust for emperry—
But to guard well the true Faith Patrick taught.

Remember! they or we no faith-troth brake

With Thee, when Thou art wrothed by battling hordes
And raise one to re-tell Thy Love and make Thy little creatures sheathe their little swords.

Or they each other shall exterminate And the earth (which was ere Thy creating mood,
A bubble of water, shapeless, desolate) Shall drift a derelict bubble of heaving
blood :

A firmamentary sore : and anger Thee Till Thou wilt pluck it from its ordered place,
And in Thy just wrath lunge it, hurtlingly,
To be for ever lost in infinite space.

Or Thou mayhap of all Thy worlds will fash]
And clench Thy Hand wherein, motelike, they spin

And with one ruining chaotic crash
Silence for evermore their rhythmic din.

Ah, no ! wax not so wroth, dread Lord !
Behold

This corpse-swamped earth in panging agony

And be appeased as with the Flood of old
Or with Thy Son's last sob on Calvary.

And, from the heavens, graciously bend forth

And mix our blood with tears from Thy grave Eyes,

And bathe and heal the gaping wounds of earth

And cleanse it of its foul impurities ;

And raise one of our race to speak to man
In such enthundered tones as Thou
employed

When in the stark Beginning Thou began
To call the systems from the vast dark
Void.

Or in such wise as Thou to Adam spake,
To Noah and to Abraham, and tell
Of Thy great mercies till his singings shake

The towers of Heaven and the crypts of Hell.

Let him be strong of purpose and ne'er
cease

Till he bequeathe this 'nobling heritage
And may thine angels wind his hymn of peace

Around the world while rolleth age on age.

And men shall see Thee in the air and sea,
And hear Thee in the storm, and wind,
and wave,

And smell Thee in the leaf, and flower and tree,

And touch and taste Thee in the quiet grave.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON MR. GREGORY'S WORK.

OLD WORLD BALLADS. 2/- net.

Studies—" . . . It may seem a paradox to say it, though it has been said, that the ultimate makers of a nation are not the leaders—either in war, politics, or industry—but the poets, who give deathless fame to the achievements of those leaders . . . who, for instance, in former times, dare speak or sing of '98 in Ireland. Few indeed; but now the sorrows of her people at that time, as at all other, are better known. . . . This little book of song contains four ballads on this period, written in the Ulster-folk dialect, and in them the poet seems to have caught the spirit of the time with unerring precision. The condensed feeling expressed in 'A Rebel's Wife,' brief as the ballad is, tells us more about '98 than many a page of dull history. The longer 'Ballad of Master Fox,' which seems as if it came straight out of Percy's Reliques, is quite remarkable for the same old-world skill: one could scarcely recognise, if not told, that it was written, so to speak, yesterday..."

The Irish Review—" a long ballad that is Scots in form, vocabulary, and substance. 'The Ballad of Master Fox' has all the concrete grisliness of the type, and the writer has been able to carry it on without the reader being left to question once his words, his incidents, or the characters he presents"

The Athenæum—"Framed on old-world models, these ballads have successfully caught the old-world spirit. In the Ballads of the Irish Rebellion of 1798, written in the Ulster-folk dialect, Mr. Gregory is at his best. . . ."

The Northern Whig—" Of late we have seen a new interest in the ballad. Mr. G. Chesterton's "Ballad of the White Horse" is an authentic addition to poetry; Mr. Masfield has tried his hand at it in his own way; and, to go a little further back, 'The Ballad of Reading Gaol,' though derived rather from 'The Ancient Mariner' than from the Border Minstrelsy, remains Oscar Wilde's final contribution to literature. In 'The Ballad of Master Fox' Mr. Gregory, unlike these writers has aimed less at an adaptation than at a reconstruction. The work is an uncannily clever piece of thinking back, not merely as regards form, but in its expression of the mediaeval attitude . . . and the manner in which he modifies the verse to reflect the varying moods of the tale displays fine artistry."

PRESS OPINIONS

The Irish Rosary—" . . . That real poetry pays and receives recognition nowadays has been proved once more in the case of Iadric Gregory. To judge by the extracts from reviews of 'The Ulster Folk' contained at the back of his latest book, 'Old World Ballads,' that first volume received an unusual amount of attention from the great English papers. At home he was hailed as the originator of a new movement in Irish verse.

" . . . The longest ballad in the book is 'The Ballad of Master Fox,' and it is a strange and terrifying piece of work. The finish is perfect; and written as it is in the old Border Ballad form, it will surely be mistaken for an ancient poem that has lain for generations in obscurity. It would be wrong to call it an imitation; for it is the real thing, and possesses all the colour and life of an old ballad, and that peculiar weakness of form which is the product of infinite pains.

" . . . Because of his restraint, there seems to me to have been no writer of verse who expressed Ulster's awful sorrows with the same vivid fidelity as Mr. Gregory. In his Irish ballads he has given us works of art which will hereafter be read and remembered in thousands of Irish homes. And he has done something else; he has forced the reality of the horrors of 1798 upon the English-speaking world. It would be hard to set limits upon the power of such verse."

PRESS OPINIONS

THE ULSTER FOLK. 1/- net.

The Nation—" . . . In 'The Ulster Folk' Mr. Padric Gregory sings gaily and freshly to old tunes, and puts his personality into his verse . . ."

The Spectator—"Mr. Padric Gregory's 'The Ulster Folk' is a series of folk-songs reconstructed from floating airs and fragments still to be found in Down and Antrim. Apart from their historical interest, these ballads show a real poetic sense and a delightful skill in the use of the Ulster dialect . . ."

Literary World—"These humorous or pathetic poems in the dialect of Antrim and Down are sometimes founded on snatches of folk-songs and sometimes independent compositions. They are refreshingly direct, and have something of the old ballad-flavour so rare in Ireland. . . . Mr. Gregory retains a pleasant sense of humour, now too seldom, alas! admitted into Irish compositions; we are forgetting how to laugh in the Green Island."

Irish Book Lover—"The author, like Burns, has picked up here and there amongst the peasantry a striking stanza or curious couplet of genuine folk-song, and enshrined it in a poem. The result is a book of lilting verse that wafts the scent of the Braid Valley and the hills of Down across the Irish Sea. We have read nothing to equal it since Moira O'Neill ceased to sing."

T.P.'s Weekly—"The author has collected many of the old folk-songs of Antrim and Down . . . Where only snatches of song or incomplete versions could be obtained, he has completed them. Being a poet, they are better for it. Because a dead peasant has forgotten part of a song, it is no reason why a living poet should not remember it. The poems have humour, and lilt and pathos, and are not for Ulster alone, but for many."

PRESS OPINIONS

Larchan O'Chiaran in Sinn Fein (Dublin)—“I had been reading in the Irish Review for June a notice referring to the verse—almost all of it in ballad form, and all of it unconventional—which J. B. Yeats has gathered up in several monthly issues of ‘A Broadside,’ In the notice the reviewer expressed the opinion that ‘a new movement in Irish verse will, one day, originate in this singular collection.’ The words recalled to my mind a small volume of verse entitled ‘The Ulster Folk,’ which I had been reading some time previously. I reopened it, thinking that here indeed was an instance in which the event—or, at any rate the commencement of it—had preceded the prophet . . . ”

THIS BOOK IS DUE ON THE LAST DATE STAMPED BELOW

AN INITIAL FINE OF 25 CENTS
WILL BE ASSESSED FOR FAILURE TO RETURN
THIS BOOK ON THE DATE DUE. THE PENALTY
WILL INCREASE TO 50 CENTS ON THE FOURTH DAY AND TO $1.00 ON THE SEVENTH DAY OVERDUE.

APR 15 1933

MAR 21 1934

LD 21-50m-1,'35

etc pso

YB 47289

002195

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY

